

Help Lightfern with GTM

Lightfern is the AI-powered writing tool. We're changing the future of communication, starting with your email inbox. Powered by the world's best autocomplete model, it's context-aware, recognising and adapting to the subtleties of your unique voice.

We focus on quality, high-stakes communication rather than triaging inboxes or automation, with our tool frequently being used by GTM leaders, founders, and VCs in stacks combining efficiency with impact.

Problem

Lightfern is pre-revenue, offering free, unlimited use to users. The intention here is to get loyal, high-quality growth and stickiness, as well as allowing us to collect feedback on the product. So far, we have strong user retention, working on a B2C basis but with the goal of eventually working towards B2B.

We face two main dilemmas:

1. Lightfern's mission statement (found here) champions human intent, human connection, and human taste. To ensure alignment and high impact, we must be particularly targeted in who we reach out to, and how.
2. As it is both (currently) an email tool and working in existing surfaces, Lightfern sits behind the scenes. With a relatively 'quiet' product, it is even more important that our user base is loud.

Challenge

Your goal is twofold:

a) Build a system that identifies not just potential users, but potential champions of the product, and build a pipeline for outreach that allows an informed, targeted approach for each instance. So far, Lightfern's growth has relied on word-of-mouth referrals from respected operators and leaders.

They should be mission-aligned, with a strong potential for network effect, whilst also working in a role with high email volume.

Examples of signals indicating potential for network effect:

- A consistently engaged, large audience on social media

- Work in partnerships or community events
- A senior executive (e.g. C-suite)
- Thought leader
- VC or accelerator involvement
- AI educator

Examples of signals for mission alignment:

- Engaging in/leading discourse around taste, 'AI slop'
- Having a strong appreciation for written communication (e.g. may run a Substack or some other kind of blog post/newsletter)
- A distinct voice
- Posts on building out a stack (signals understanding of need for particular AI tools to fit particular needs/tasks)
- A role that involves relationship management and high-stakes communication

The best outbound solutions will balance automation with personalisation, allowing targeted, high impact outreach to be managed by 1-2 team members.

b) Build a strong pipeline for inbound which both positions Lightfern in the market and aligns with our ICP's needs, and/or our mission. This could, for example, include Google search terms which are likely to align with the above signals, or AI search.

We are currently hiring for our Founding GTM to join us at our offices in Barbican. If you're interested, speak to Doug/Mishti or reach out to careers@lightfern.com.
